

ABSTRACT

A platform is adaptively configured with one of one or more pre-established configuration parameter values, based at least in part on one or more performance events observed during the platform's execution of a workload.